

TEEN WELLBEING SEL SERIES

Know Your Worth

A Self-Esteem & Confidence Workbook for Teens

Written by Daniel Tesfamariam

Ages 10-19 - Printable

Home - Classroom - Counseling - Calm Corners

Reproducible for one home or classroom

How to Use This Book

This workbook is made for ages 10 to 19 - a stage packed with change, pressure, and big emotions. It won't talk down to you. Instead, it gives you real tools, honest questions, and space to think for yourself.

There are no grades and no wrong answers. Work at your own pace, be honest in the writing spaces, and come back to the pages that help most. Skills grow with practice.

For Grown-Ups

- ☐ Give privacy - journaling is more honest when it isn't graded or read without permission.
- ☐ Offer to talk, but don't force it; being available matters more than pushing.
- ☐ Model the skills yourself - teens notice what adults actually do.
- ☐ If big feelings feel unmanageable, connect the teen with a counselor or trusted professional.

Tip: There are no wrong answers here. Every feeling is okay. What matters is what we choose to DO with big feelings.

How This Book Works

Each part mixes three things: short explanations of what's going on in your brain and body, self-checks to notice your own patterns, and tools plus reflection to help you respond in ways you feel good about.

Getting the most from it

- ☐ Be honest - this is for you, not for show.
- ☐ Try the tools more than once before deciding if they help.
- ☐ Use the trackers to spot patterns over a week or two.
- ☐ Revisit the plans and update them as you learn.

This activity book supports everyday social-emotional learning and self-reflection. It is not therapy or medical advice. If you are struggling with your safety or mental health, please talk to a trusted adult, a counselor, or a local helpline right away.

What's Inside

- 1 Understanding Self-Esteem
- 2 My Inner Voice
- 3 Strengths & Identity
- 4 Building Confidence
- 5 Real-Life Scenarios
- 6 Reflection & Plan

Part 1: Understanding Self-Esteem

Confidence is built, not born.

What Self-Esteem Really Is

Self-esteem is how you value yourself. Healthy self-esteem doesn't mean thinking you're better than everyone - it means knowing you have worth even when you fail, get rejected, or aren't the best in the room.

Self-esteem isn't fixed. It grows through how you talk to yourself, the challenges you take on, and the way you treat yourself when things go wrong. This book helps you build it.

Healthy self-esteem sounds like

- ☐ 'I made a mistake' - not 'I am a mistake.'
- ☐ 'I can learn this' - not 'I'm just bad at everything.'
- ☐ 'I matter, even when I'm not perfect.'

The Inner Critic vs. the Inner Coach

Everyone has an inner voice. The inner critic tears you down: 'You're not good enough.' The inner coach is honest but kind: 'That was hard - what can you learn?' You can't delete the critic, but you can turn up the coach.

Talking to yourself the way you'd talk to a good friend is one of the most powerful self-esteem skills there is.

Coaching yourself

- ☐ Would I say this to a friend? If not, don't say it to yourself.
- ☐ Swap 'I can't' for 'I can't yet.'
- ☐ Notice effort, not just results.

Part 2: My Inner Voice

Catch the critic, coach yourself.

How I See Myself

Rate how true each feels right now.

1 = Never 5 = Always

I like who I am, most of the time.

(1) (2) (3) (4) (5)

I can accept a compliment without brushing it off.

(1) (2) (3) (4) (5)

I treat myself kindly when I fail.

(1) (2) (3) (4) (5)

I don't need everyone's approval to feel okay.

(1) (2) (3) (4) (5)

I can name things I'm good at.

(1) (2) (3) (4) (5)

I believe I can grow and improve.

(1) (2) (3) (4) (5)

What my answers tell me

How My Inner Critic Talks

Everyone's brain falls into 'thinking traps' sometimes. Naming them helps you step back. Circle the ones you notice most, then write an example.

All-or-nothing

Seeing things as total success or total failure, no middle ground.

Catastrophizing

Assuming the worst possible outcome will happen.

Mind-reading

Believing you know others are judging you - without proof.

Labeling

Calling yourself 'stupid' or 'a failure' over one event.

~~A thinking trap I fall into, and a real example:~~

Filtering

Only noticing the negatives and ignoring the positives.

Should statements

Harsh rules like 'I should always...' that set you up to feel bad.

From Critic to Coach

Our thoughts shape our feelings. Sometimes an automatic thought is unhelpful or untrue. You can CATCH the thought, CHECK if it's fair and true, and CHANGE it into a more balanced one. This is a skill - it gets easier with practice.

1. The situation (just the facts):

2. The automatic thought that popped up:

3. The feeling it gave me (and how strong, 0-10):

4. Check it: Is it 100% true? What's the evidence? Am I mind-reading or catastrophizing?

5. A more balanced, fair thought:

6. How I feel now:

Part 3: Strengths & Identity

You are more than any one thing.

My Strengths Inventory

We often list our flaws easily but forget our strengths. Time to balance the scale. Circle strengths you have, then add your own.

- ☐ Kind
- ☐ Funny
- ☐ Loyal
- ☐ Curious
- ☐ Creative
- ☐ Hard-working
- ☐ Brave
- ☐ Good listener
- ☐ Honest
- ☐ Determined
- ☐ Caring
- ☐ Fair

Three strengths I'm proud of - with an example of each

The Real Me

What do the people who love you value about you?

What are you proud of that has nothing to do with looks or grades?

Part 4: Building Confidence

Confidence grows by doing.

Confidence Follows Action

We often wait to 'feel confident' before trying - but it usually works the other way. You act (even nervously), you survive, and confidence grows. Courage comes first; confidence follows.

Small brave steps stack up. Each one is proof to yourself that you can do hard things.

Building it

- ☐ Do one slightly-scary thing regularly.
- ☐ Keep promises to yourself.
- ☐ Collect evidence of times you coped.

My Confidence Challenge

Pick small, doable steps that stretch you a little.

A small brave step I'll take this week:

How I'll talk to myself before and after:

Proof from my past that I can handle hard things:

Part 5: Real-Life Scenarios

Confidence under pressure.

Confidence Situations (1)

Read each situation. There are many good choices! Think it through, then write or draw what you could do to stay calm and kind.

- 1 You have to speak up in class or a group but feel scared.

What could you do?

- 2 Someone puts you down and you start to believe it.

What could you do?

- 3 You want to try out for something but fear failing.

What could you do?

Confidence Situations (2)

Read each situation. There are many good choices! Think it through, then write or draw what you could do to stay calm and kind.

1 You compare yourself to a sibling or friend and feel small.

What could you do?

2 You made a mistake and want to hide.

What could you do?

3 A compliment makes you uncomfortable.

What could you do?

My Personal Wellbeing Plan

Pull it all together. This is your go-to plan when things get hard.

My early warning signs that a feeling is getting big:

My top 3 tools that actually work for me:

People I can reach out to (and how):

Kind, true things I can tell myself:

One habit that helps me feel steady:

When You Need More Help

Some feelings are too big to handle alone - and that's not weakness, it's human. Reaching out is a strong, smart move.

Reach out if...

- ☐ A feeling won't ease up for days, or keeps getting worse.
- ☐ You're avoiding things you used to enjoy.
- ☐ You have thoughts of hurting yourself or others.
- ☐ You just need someone to talk to - that's reason enough.

Who I can reach out to

If you ever feel unsafe or think about hurting yourself, tell a trusted adult now or contact a local emergency number or crisis/helpline in your country right away. You deserve support.

What Matters to Me

Knowing what matters to you makes decisions and hard days easier. When you act in line with your values, stress often makes more sense and feels more manageable.

Three values that matter most to me

One goal that fits those values

One small step I can take this week

Checking In With Myself

What's one thing I'm handling better than I used to?

What still feels hard, and what might help?

Saying It: Boundary Scripts

A boundary is a limit that protects your wellbeing. Boundaries can be kind AND firm. Practice wording so it's ready when you need it.

Saying no without over-explaining: "No thanks, that doesn't work for me." My version:

Asking for space: "I need some time to myself right now." My version:

Naming a limit online: "Please don't share that." My version:

Asking for what I need: "It would help me if..." My version:

A Letter to Future Me

Write a short letter to yourself six months from now.

What do you hope is different? What do you want to remember?

Good Things Worth Noticing

Noticing good things helps calm our minds and lift our mood. It doesn't erase hard feelings, but it reminds us that good things are here too.

Three good things about today

Someone I'm thankful for - and why

Draw something that makes you smile:

A large, empty rectangular box with rounded corners and a thin grey border, intended for a drawing.

My Notes & Reflections

A series of horizontal lines for writing notes, spanning the width of the page below the header.

What Matters to Me

Knowing what matters to you makes decisions and hard days easier. When you act in line with your values, stress often makes more sense and feels more manageable.

Three values that matter most to me

One goal that fits those values

One small step I can take this week

Checking In With Myself

What's one thing I'm handling better than I used to?

What still feels hard, and what might help?

Saying It: Boundary Scripts

A boundary is a limit that protects your wellbeing. Boundaries can be kind AND firm. Practice wording so it's ready when you need it.

Saying no without over-explaining: "No thanks, that doesn't work for me." My version:

Asking for space: "I need some time to myself right now." My version:

Naming a limit online: "Please don't share that." My version:

Asking for what I need: "It would help me if..." My version:

A Letter to Future Me

Write a short letter to yourself six months from now.

What do you hope is different? What do you want to remember?

Good Things Worth Noticing

Noticing good things helps calm our minds and lift our mood. It doesn't erase hard feelings, but it reminds us that good things are here too.

Three good things about today

Someone I'm thankful for - and why

Draw something that makes you smile:

A large, empty rectangular box with rounded corners and a thin grey border, intended for a drawing.

My Notes & Reflections

Lined area for notes and reflections, consisting of 20 horizontal lines.

What Matters to Me

Knowing what matters to you makes decisions and hard days easier. When you act in line with your values, stress often makes more sense and feels more manageable.

Three values that matter most to me

One goal that fits those values

One small step I can take this week

Checking In With Myself

What's one thing I'm handling better than I used to?

What still feels hard, and what might help?

Saying It: Boundary Scripts

A boundary is a limit that protects your wellbeing. Boundaries can be kind AND firm. Practice wording so it's ready when you need it.

Saying no without over-explaining: "No thanks, that doesn't work for me." My version:

Asking for space: "I need some time to myself right now." My version:

Naming a limit online: "Please don't share that." My version:

Asking for what I need: "It would help me if..." My version:

A Letter to Future Me

Write a short letter to yourself six months from now.

What do you hope is different? What do you want to remember?

Good Things Worth Noticing

Noticing good things helps calm our minds and lift our mood. It doesn't erase hard feelings, but it reminds us that good things are here too.

Three good things about today

Someone I'm thankful for - and why

Draw something that makes you smile:

A large, empty rectangular box with rounded corners and a thin grey border, intended for a drawing.

My Notes & Reflections

Lined area for notes and reflections, consisting of 20 horizontal lines.

What Matters to Me

Knowing what matters to you makes decisions and hard days easier. When you act in line with your values, stress often makes more sense and feels more manageable.

Three values that matter most to me

One goal that fits those values

One small step I can take this week

Checking In With Myself

What's one thing I'm handling better than I used to?

What still feels hard, and what might help?

Saying It: Boundary Scripts

A boundary is a limit that protects your wellbeing. Boundaries can be kind AND firm. Practice wording so it's ready when you need it.

Saying no without over-explaining: "No thanks, that doesn't work for me." My version:

Asking for space: "I need some time to myself right now." My version:

Naming a limit online: "Please don't share that." My version:

Asking for what I need: "It would help me if..." My version:

A Letter to Future Me

Write a short letter to yourself six months from now.

What do you hope is different? What do you want to remember?
